

Navigating the new online Madison Unitarian features

(Be sure to hover over the screen to see the options shown below.)

The image shows a digital document viewer interface. The main content is a page titled "COMMUNION" with a background image of people eating at a table. The text on the page reads:

COMMUNION

Communion is a powerful word and a powerful concept, but many of us dismiss it because of the symbolism of the Christian ritual of Communion. While our observance of Communion goes back to the beginning of Unitarianism and Universalism, the ritual has not enjoyed the status in our tradition that it has enjoyed in other Protestant traditions. This makes sense given our liberal theology, which has tended to a low Christology that emphasizes the humanity of Jesus, and a high anthropology that focuses on human potential.

As we have moved away from traditional observances of communion, we have embraced communion as connection and fellowship. Rev. Ray Baughan, a Unitarian Universalist minister, wrote in 1965, "When people turn from the table where bread is broken and candles glow, be sure you have invited them not to your house, but to their own, and offered not your wisdom, but your love."

From the Thaifetnes Journal on the theme, communion.

The interface includes a navigation bar at the bottom with the following features:

- Current page number: 2-3 / 16
- SHARE: Share a link via email or on social media
- SAVE: Download a PDF file
- LIKE: Like the document
- DOWNLOAD: Download a PDF file
- Zoom in or zoom out: Adjust the view of the document
- Keyword search option: Search for specific content
- Fullscreen mode: Expand the document to fill the screen

Navigation arrows are also present: a left arrow labeled "Flips to previous page" and a right arrow labeled "Flips to next page".

Hyperlinks are embedded in the document. To view, hover over the web address and click.